Among the pleasing specialties presented may be mentioned singing of Misses Belle Howitt and Leona Bradley, and the "changes" of Miss Alecia Jourdan. Messrs. Sheridan and Mack are good artists, but there is too much of the variety style in their performances. The patrons of the theater admire what is refined, and that which approaches the coarse is objectionable. There is a broad distinction drawn between the variety stage and the regular theater, and each has its admirers. The Sheridan and Mack troupe have not drawn well for the reasons above given, and yet they deserved a more liberal patronage. The troupe will appear at a matinee to-day, after which they will leave for New Orleans. There will be no performance to-night, and during next week the theater will be closed. On
